

Good morning 6T!

Come in. Get sat down quickly. You've got a morning task to do (seriously, you do. They're in your packs!) I guess this one time you can sit on a sofa or at your kitchen table instead of your desk. My treat.

I'm sending this letter from Mr. Turner HQ, otherwise known as my kitchen. While I had the pleasure of coming in to school this week, none of my lovely 6T children were there and I've got to know: how are you all doing? Hopefully you're all surviving well without me being around to call you by silly nicknames or dance embarrassingly (although I'm sure your parents are more than capable of doing that in my place). Some of you, I haven't seen in almost two weeks now (naming no names, David and Natalia) and would you believe it, each and every one of you is sorely missed at the moment. It's like a whole class of Seths, the time you've spent away!

The weather has been glorious this week, so I hope that you have been able to get outside and experience it. Given how many of you have Switches, there's no excuse not to get in the garden and soak up some sun. Have you been doing exercise with Joe Wicks? I know some of the other teachers have, but I found some awesome superhero exercises to do, although my neighbours have been laughing at them through my window. They won't be laughing when they need a superhero and Mr. Turner comes to the rescue.

Apart from exercise AND AN AWFUL LOT OF REVISION THAT YOU ARE DEFINITELY DOING, what have you all been doing to pass your days? What's good on TV? Have you done something you've never done before? Have you Skyped someone from a safe and supervised environment to make sure they're ok? Hopefully you're not bored yet because you've all got such creative minds whether it's writing or art or imaginative games. A friend has challenged all of us to build pillow forts in our flats, so that's definitely next on my to-do list. After a nice cup of tea. And this letter. And lunch. But definitely after all of those things.

Anyway, I'm going to let you get on with your day now. No doubt, you have a hundred ideas of things that you want to do with it. Make sure you do a little work each day to keep your brain working, a little exercise to keep your muscles working and a little laughing to keep you heart working. And remember, you are always in the thoughts of myself and the other staff from school, as well as in the care of God, who has been watching all along.

... It was quite fun writing this. I might do another next week.
